How to use the list

The main objective of the list is to provide useful information for all those who want to observe the fundamental mitzvah of kashrut, despite finding themselves in places where the availability of kosher products is actually difficult.

Within the list you will essentially find three product categories:

1. Products that enjoy a valid and Orthodox hekhshèr ;
2. Products from companies that, although not reporting the hekhshèr on the packaging, have been carefully verified;
3. Products, mostly coming from abroad, which appear in the kosher lists of the local Rabbanuyòt.

It should be underlined that the list contains various types of products that enjoy the hekhshèr of certifying bodies and/or local Orthodox rabbis, however it brings together various levels of kashrùt. There are both "mehadrin" products, i.e. which follow the most rigorous kashrut standard, appropriately indicated, and simply kosher products.

By way of example, products (chalavi) that contain milk, where the contrary is not indicated, are to be considered products with uncontrolled milk (chalàv stam) and are permitted following the facilitating opinion of some rabbinical authorities including Rav Moshe Feinstein zzl Obviously this type of product cannot under any circumstances be preferred to products where the milk is controlled (chalàv Israel).

In general, products that display a valid hekhshèr on the packaging are always preferable to products that do not.

Please note that the list must be reserved exclusively for private use, based on your level of kashrùt, however the list has no claim to replace the opinion of the local Rabbanùt to which reference must always be made.

Finally, it is useful to remember that the list requires constant updates and additions which will come hand in hand with the information we receive from the Rabbanim and the certifying bodies.

We thank Dr. Marco Salvadori for compiling the list, Rav Gad Eldad for the revision work, Mira Maknouz, the Ucei and the Jewish Community of Rome for the fundamental support of the initiative.

Rav Alfonso Arbib

Glossary

Subcategory: Class that identifies the group to which the products belong.

Type: Product qualification.

Brand: Manufacturer's name as shown on the products.

Product detail: Commercial name of the product.

Format: They bind the kosher product to certain parameters of quantity, packaging or production plant.

Hekhshèr: Identifies the kosher body or certifier.

BDM / BDR approved: The products with this wording are verified and authorized by BET DIN MILAN and BET DIN ROMA in collaboration with kosher certification bodies; these products therefore enjoy a hashgachà (control) from an approved certifying body, but do not show the hekhshèr on the packaging.

Status: Identifies the halakhic status of the product

Parve: Neutral marked with the letter P

Chalavi: Made from milk marked with the letter L; if not followed by another description, indicates the presence of uncontrolled milk (Chalàv Akùm)

Chalàv Israel: Milk checked by a Jew from milking

Chalàv Akum: Uncontrolled milk.

Pat Israël product cooked with the participation of a Jew. If not indicated, the products are not Pat Israël

Fish neutral fish products. Report due to the rabbinical prohibition on consuming at the same time fish and meat.

Notes: Additional product reports.

Hekhshèr on the packaging: The product is kosher only if it has the symbol/signature of the certifying body/rabbi on the packaging.

Where the wording Hekhshèr is not specified on the packaging, the product can be considered kosher even without the symbol/signature.

Batch code number: Indicates that the item must be considered kosher only when it has the batch number shown in the note on the package.

5 - List of prohibited additives

Edited by Rav Riccardo Di Segni

Additives classified according to the European number - Updated in May 2020

"In the European Union all food additives are identified by a number preceded by the letter E. Gli Food additives must always be indicated among the ingredients of the foods where they are present. The Product labels must report both the function of the additive in the finished food (for example colourant, preservative) and the specific substance used, using reference to the relevant E number or its denomination (e.g. E 415 or xanthan gum)."

The problems concern both the principle itself and the substances in which the principles are diluted, stabilized, preserved (which can be fats or alcoholic derivatives). Some of these products are definitely kosher.

Others are definitely prohibited, resulting from prohibited substances. Others have dubious origins, possibly being derived from kosher or non-kosher sources (for example monodiglycerides of fatty acids) and are not permitted to unless they are checked and certified.

Below, among the products allowed in Europe, the list of those prohibited and those prohibited in the absence of control and those derived from milk. Differences compared to previously published lists depend on changes in the production processes.

This note refers only to additives with the E number. Generally speaking, it should be kept in mind that in the list of the ingredients some generic or ambiguous terms appear (such as "edible fats" or "flavors") which if not are adequately illustrated may hide unauthorized ingredients or solvents. Even more generally it must be considered that the list of ingredients usually does not fully inform and does not guarantee the presence of prohibited substances that the factory uses for other products, sometimes with the same machines, and which could enter the finished product.
